The New Pope in the Footsteps of His Predecessor-The Question of Capital and Labor High Compliment Paid by the Pope to a Veteran Cathelle Editor.

ROME, Jan. 17.—The industry and the activity of Leo XIII, were proverbial. Plus X, is the energetic inheritor of his labore. From 5 o'clock in the morning until 11 o'clock in the evening his time is occupied completely with the interests of the Church.

During the day the Cardinals, the Bishops and other important personages come to that simple office, that modest little chamber, in which up to the present time the Pope has given his audiences. When the flood of visitors is over he studies the records sent to him by the different Roman congrega-tions and gives orders to his four private secretaries. He carefully reads the pon-tifical acts, decrees, pastoral letters, dis-courses, &c., the number of which increases almost every week.

The "Motu Proprio" of the 1st of Decem ber upon the popular Christian action acquires by its object a considerable. importance. The Holy Father explains in the preamble the occasion for and the aim of this act to safeguard, to assure and to increase the union among Catholics working on the social plane, especially in Italy. The discussions carried on by the "National Congress of Italian Catholics" at Bologna have threatened the concord of minds and of wills. Pius X. desires to strengthen it, and insists on prescribing once for all a certain number of fundamental propositions which everybody must agree to. It is with this manifest aim that Pius X. extracts the formulas of these proposition from the acts promulgated by Leo XIII. upon the subject of social action. In this way Pius X. proves, to those who may have need of proof, that his social policies continue those of Leo XIII, In this way are dissipated the unreasonable attacks and the childish nonsense which spoke of change of policy." The action of the new pontificate is enforced from everything that was taught and prescribed by Pope If any uncertainties arise in regard to the meaning or the scope of any one of these propositions, it is evident that, having extracted them from the acts of Leo XIII. Pius X. points out that it is in these very acts that one must seek the light of a clear context. While the "Motu Proprio" is addressed to the Italians, it contains principles and general rules of discipline which form one useful rule for Catholics of every country .. Consequently it is clearly understood that the meaning of the word "democracy," or "Christian demo-crats," includes no element of political form. Democracy does not mean republicanism. The democratic action has a deeper and a wider sense. It is, in all its fulness, the action shown by Catholics in the service of the people, having for its aim their continuous elevation from all points of view, material, moral, intellectual and Thus it is also made clear that certain Catholics cannot dream of equality in conditions. The inequality of talents, of forces and of natural resources is in the divine plan. Neither can there be, under any pretext, justification for fomenting disobedience to hierarchical superiors. The Italian Catholics must continue to keep away from political elections; but, of course, the electoral action on the administrative ground for the nomination free; and in matters relating to capital and labor, outside of charity, justice intervenes and gives the only right to claims. Among these questions of justice the accomplishment by the workman of the work which he is engaged to do, the regard for rights of private property, respect for human weakness and human dignity in the workman of the workman will be Gov. and Mrs. Odell and Mayor and Mrs. McClellan. ness and human dignity in the workman and the payment of fair wages are all in-

Upon this last point the question has been asked. What was the idea of the Pope in regard to fair wages? Pius X. himself speaks of the luminous teachings of his august predecessor. In these teachings of Leo XIII. there are few pages so famous, so resplendent in clearness, justice and equity, as the immortal lessons of the "Rerum Novarum" upon the essential conditions, in justice, of every labor contract.

To bring about order and peace in the world of labor, Pius X. enumerates the institutions often recommended by Lee XIII. especially the corporations. Since Pius X. confirms once more the work of the Congress in the mission of directing Italian Catholic action, it is legitimate to seek in the official documents of this great association the way it understands and practices the institutions recommended by the Holy See. Now, these documents are numerous and of the highest importance. Those which emanated from the second group, the group specially charged with the social action, prescribed for Italy the principles and the methods of the school uni versally known under the name of "Social Catholics" or "Christian Democrats." They plant the foundation of the professional organization in the working centres, and give to it, as its essential object, the stability of complete liberty of the two contracting parties.

Once more Pius X. admits and consecrate the current usage of the appellation "Christian Democracy," on condition, of course, that it signifies the popular Catholic action, excluding all preferences of a politicoconstitutional order, and excluding also the political theories or systems with which some of its partisans and the greater portion of its adversaries insist on confusing t. And here becomes clearly manifest the continuity of the two pontificates. This continuity Pius X. explains and accentuates upon points which might be considered secondary.

There is nothing more characteristic from this point of view than the pastoral letter which he himself addressed on Christ-mas Eve to Eugène Veuillot, the editor of UUnivers. It is known that this journal represents in France absolute fidelity to the Holy See and filial docility in regard to all orders from Rome, understood as Rome berself wishes them to be understood.

It has sometimes been claimed that the Univers had distorted these directions, and that its exaggerations constituted the motive and the excuse of the recalcitrants A hundred times and in all forms Leo XIII. denied this accusation and declared that the Univers was "the good journal." Nevertheless, Leo XIII. never sent a pastoral letter to the Univers. Pius X. has just sent one, wishing to reward a veteran of many Catholic battles, who has been faithful to his chief in many difficult situations and in spite of all trials. Pius X. makes this recompense magnificent. He has multiplied his praises. "The Univers," he says, will never abandon its traditions of fidelity and submission to the Holy See. This guarantee is in the tried value of its

DEBTS HALF A MILLION BEYOND HIS PERSONAL ESTATE.

The Plane Maker's Heavy Investments in Astoria Enterprises Were Unproductive -His Personalty Estimated When He Died at $2,000,000-Owed Paderewski

The appraisal made by Charles K. Lexow in November, 1896, shows that it was not worth within $500,000 of his obligations for debts and administration expenses. The appraisal shows assets of $1,067,229; and debts and expenses chargeable to the estate aggregated $2,190,483.

When Mr. Steinway's will was probated, the estate aggregated $2,190,483.

When Mr. Steinway's will was probated, the petition filed by the executors set out that he was worth $500,000 in real and about $2,000,000 in personal property. No estimate of Mr. Steinway's realty has yet been made public.

The bulk of the money owing was due to banks, but among the other claims is one of $61,621 due to Ignace J. Paderewski, the pianist. Louise A. Steinway for $61,500. The estates of Charles, Albert and Henry Steinway appear as creditors for $125,000, and Clarissa Steinway for $61,500. The estates of Charles, Albert and Henry Steinway appear as creditors for $70,000, $73,000 and $273,274 respectively. The testator owed also about $114,000 to Jacob and Doretta Ziegler. The administration expenses totalled $50,676.

The executors and trustees under the will are Charles H. and Frederick T. Steinway, two nephews, and her husband, Louis von Bermuth, a daughter, and her husband, and his nephews.

The principal asset is 8,023 shares of the Steinway & Sons Piano Manufacturing Company, valued at $1,203,450. Other items are: Bonds of the St inway Realty Company, worth $54,240; life insurance policies, $20,000; Long Island City war-

Other items are: Bonds of the Strinway Realty Company, worth $54,240; life insurance policies, $20,000; Long Island City warrants, $45,977; Deutcher Verein bonds, $32,750; 50 shares of the Bank of the Metropolis, $15,000; a claim on the estate of C. F. Stein, $30,000, and 4,250 shares of N. Y. & L. I. R. R. Co., $42,500.

Mr. Steinway was largely interested in land improvement and other schemes at Astoria, L. I. Most of them were unproductive, and his holdings are of little or no value to-day. He had invested $100,000 in the Ravenswood Improvement Company, $50,000 in the Universal Gas Improvement Company and $181,800 in the Daimler Motor Company and $181,800 in the Daimler Motor Company. The appraiser reports all these investments as of nominal value only.

GAME DESTROYED BY THE COLD. Whole Flocks of Dead Birds Under the Snow-Carcasses of Deer Also Found.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Jan. 30.-New York city sportsmen will have to seek other than their usual haunts for game this year, as the quail, partridge, woodcock, rabbits and deer have been almost exterminated by the unprecedented cold weather of this winter. Farmers coming in from outlying districts say that whole flocks of dead birds are uncovered by the thawing snow. Even the hardy crow and hawk are among the victims of starvation. The carcasses of deer also are found here and there. This condition seems general throughout the counties of Wayne and Pike in Pennsylvania and Suliivan in New York.

Not only have the animals and birds had to fight the cold and starvation, but they have been destroyed by the wholesale by voracious wildcats, which have been driven by starvation into places where they have never ventured before, even going to hen houses after the domestic birds. Walter Steets, foreman of Chester W. Chapin's Steets, foreman of thesets w. chapin's big game preserves in Sullivan county, on Wednesday shot the largest one of these animals ever killed in the county. The animal had played havoc among Mr. Chapin's imported English pheasants and Belgian hares. Howard Doyle, who lives near Hancock, had an adventure with one of the cats that he is not likely to forget. Something was after his chickens and he went to find out the trouble. A big cat, maddened by hunger, sprang at him. His bulldog leaped at the same moment and intercepted the cat, which he succeeded in killing. John Matthews of Griffin Corners says he does
